Critical Approaches to the Study of Nationalism

Phd Course

2 Credits

Instructors: Michael L. Miller and András Pap

Course description:

This course will examine scholarly approaches to the study of nationalism, drawing on a wide range of theoretical and empirical literature, beginning with discussions of key concepts and classical debates in nationalism studies, followed by an exploration of more recent methodological considerations regarding the study of nationalism, ethnicity, and group identity. In particular, the course will draw on literature from sociology, gender studies, international relations, political science, history, and law, offering a critical and interdisciplinary approach to the study of nationalism. This course is required for students pursuing a Minor in Nationalism Studies in the Doctoral School of Political Science, Public Policy and International Relations.

Requirements:

Students registered for this course are expected to attend classes and actively participate in class discussions. Students must read mandatory readings and give presentations on the recommended readings. Class presentations should critically analyze and contextualize the assigned readings, drawing on literature not listed in the syllabus. Students are encouraged to assess the implications of the presented theories through relevant case studies.

Students are to write an extended review essay (4,000 words) on a recent book related to the course. Possible titles will be suggested, but students are also welcome to recommend monographs for review. These review essays should aim for a publishable quality; if this requirement is met, instructors will provide assistance for seeking out potential journals.

Course evaluation:

Class participation: 25%
Class presentations: 25%
Review essay: 50%
September 20

Class 1: Introduction

September 27

Class 2: Typologies of Nationalism

October 4

Class 3: The Modernist Turn

October 11

Class 4: Banal Nationalism and Everyday Nationalism

October 18

Class 5: Gender Studies and Nationalism I

October 25

Class 6: Gender Studies and Nationalism II [Guest: Elissa Helms, Department of Gender Studies]

Elissa Helms, “Rejecting Angelina: Bosnian War Rape Survivors and the Ambiguities of Sex in War,” Slavic Review 73/1 (Fall 2014), 612-634.

November 8

Class 7: International Relations and Nationalism I

November 15

Class 8: International Relations and Nationalism II [Guest: Erin Jenne, Department of International Relations]

Erin Jenne, "Nationalism, Populism and Foreign Policy in Postcommunist Europe" (Draft paper)

November 22

Class 9: Legal Studies and Nationalism I
Hurst Hannum: International Law, Encyclopedia of Nationalism, 405-419

Will Kymlicka, Multicultural Citizenship, Individual Rights and Collective Rights, pp. 34-48

November 29

Class 10: Legal Studies and Nationalism II

December 6.

Class 11: Book Presentations